The tombs of His Royal Highness the late Duke of Sussex, the Princess Sophia, Ducrow, and George Robins (the prince of horsemanship and auctioneering), are worth a visit. The cemetery approaches the railway, and extends over a part of the tunnel. The railway now enters a richly pastoral country, and as the beauties of nature have hitherto been veiled from us by a UCCOMION of tiiniol nH riittm. --iv, . Wimi the landscapes which are presented to our view, as we begin to experience the exciting effect of railway travelling. Passing through an open country, by an express or fast train, where the eye can embrace an uninterrupted view--the steady, but swift motion of the train imparts a peculiarly pleasing sensation, which may be compared to the sense of enjoying the changing scenes of a constantly varying panorama, without being required to perform the least effort or labour to obtain it. The scenery now rapidly improves; passing Wormwood Scrubs on the left, we may notice the junction line of the North and South-Western Companies, curving towards the south. To the right appears some of the prettiest scenery in Middlesex; on the left is the rich foliage of Twyfonl Abbey--and before...
